Close Quarters Combat (CQB) is one of the most challenging missions undertaken by the SEAL Teams. Fighting inside of a house requires split second decisions and the ultimate in situational awareness. Rapid individual and team decisions make this an exciting event that can shape a team.

Land Navigation

Before GPS and roads humans traveled the earth with a compass and by observing the terrain. This event is typically performed in pairs and involves using a map and compass to navigate challenging terrain between a series of points. In contrast to the tactical events that require split second decision and stress management, land navigation focuses on medium to long term planning and execution.

Clients 1-100 - Price TBD

Triton paintball events are a fun group exercise that helps build the competitive nature of teams. Each event starts out with lessons on SEAL land warfare techniques. Instructors are then sent with each group and the battle begins.

Wind Tunnel

When SEALs are first learning how to skydive they start in the wind tunnel. The wind tunnel lifts you off the ground with a giant fan. "Flying" is a challenging activity that teaches focus and attention to detail. This event becomes a group exercise as the group helps the individual work on technique and maintain stable flight.

Clients 1-30 - Price TBD

Team Building Progression

Team Building Progression is a combination of events, lectures and lessons held over a period of time. A team is typically started out with a "Day at the Beach" style event followed by progressively more complex and mentally challenging events. Team Building Progression is modeled after the SEAL training model of progression from BUD/S all the way to the platoon. This longer-term approach is designed to solidify individual lessons and skills provided by the events over a period of time.
